1 HOUR

Answer all the questions in sections A, B, C, D and E (worth fifty marks). Section F, the Composition, must be written on a separate page. You are advised to spend at least THIRTY minutes on Section F (fifty marks).

A piece of advice: if you find a particular question difficult, do not pend too long worrying about it, but move on to the next question. You can always come back to it if you have time to spare at the end.

SECTION A

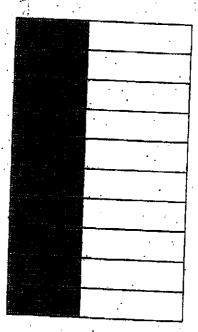

Ten words have been missed out of the following passage. Each missing word has been given a number in the passage. Underneath the passage is a list of words, each one of which is identified by a capital letter. Choose the word from the list which best fits the meaning of the passage in each of the ten places. Then, in the numbered answer spaces provided at the bottom of the page, write the capital letter which identifies the word you choose.

SECTION B

Read the following story carefully and then answer the questions by writing A, B, C, D, or E in the appropriate answer boxes.

William was feeling grateful to Robert. Gratitude to Robert was not a normal emotion of William's. Their ordinary relationship was marked by that deep distrust not unusual between brothers aged eleven and seventeen respectively. William cherished in his breast many, many grievances against Robert, and Robert cherished in his breast many, many grievances against William – but last week, Robert had all unwittingly earned that not unmixed blessing, William's gratitude.

There were those who said that they preferred William's open enmity to William's gratitude. William had a laudable habit of translating feelings into action, and when William was openly out to avenge himself upon you the results were as a rule far less devastating than when he was out to help you.

Anyway, Robert, having received a handsome present of five pounds from his godmother, and being in a generous mood, gave William 25p. This munificent gift happened to extricate William from a difficult financial position. William had taken his air gun to be mended and had subsequently, through a series of unfortunate incidents (including a broken pane in the greenhouse, and damage done to an enemy's school cap, which resulted in parental correspondence and the enforced purchase of a new cap for the enemy by William's father), found himself insolvent.

He offered his services to his mother at 6p an hour, and his mother, after a slight hesitation, allowed him to help with the arrangement of the flowers. In ten minutes he had broken two vases, knocked over a pail of water, annihilated a bunch of sweet peas by sitting on them, and left the tap running in the pantry so that the hall was completely flooded. At this point his mother hastily terminated the arrangement, refusing even to pay him for the ten minutes. William then wandered into the garden to brood over the unreasonableness and unkindness of the human beings among whom Fate had cast his lot.

Read this passage carefully:

Scrooge sat down again. As he threw his head back in the chair, his glance happened to rest upon a bell, a disused bell, that hung in the room, and communicated with a chamber in the highest storey of the building. It was with great astonishment, and with a strange, inexplicable dread, that as he looked, he saw this bell begin to swing. It swung so softly in the outset, that it scarcely made a sound; but soon it rang out loudly, and so did every bell in the house.

This might have lasted half a minute, or a minute, but it seemed an hour. The bells ceased as they had begun, together. They were succeeded by a clanking noise, deep down below; as if some person were dragging a heavy chain over the casks in the wine-merchants' cellar.

The cellar-door flew open with a booming sound, and then he heard the noise much louder, coming straight towards his door.

Without a pause, it came on through the heavy door, and passed into the room before his eyes. Marley's ghost! The chain he drew was clasped about his middle. His body was transparent.
