In August 2011 there were riots in parts of London and other major UK cities and towns that lasted for several days. Many businesses were forced to close down as a result of the damage caused by the riots, such as the House of Reeves furniture store (pictured above).

Some people felt that the reason for the riots was the extent of the social problems that exist in some cities.

Some blamed the riots on a break down of law and order. Almost 75% of those aged over 18 who were charged with offences committed during the riots had previous convictions. There were calls for increased government spending on police and prison services to help reduce crime.

However, a government minister suggested that these social problems needed to be tackled by increased investment in employment, education and family.
