In this novel Harper Lee uses a simile in this extract. ~~to create~~ "arms were like steel". This simile is used to create effect on the reader and it also gives you an idea on what Bob Ewell was like and how strong he was. This ~~could~~^{could} be linked to the theme good & evil as it shows his arms were like steel when he abused his daughter Mayella. This is a good description.

In this novel Harper Lee uses a simile in the extract "arms were like steel". The simile shows you an idea of what Bob Ewell was like and how strong he was. It also is used to create effect on the reader to show what a nasty character he was.

This quote could be linked to the theme 'good & evil' as it shows what an abusive man he was, towards his daughter Mayella and trying to hurt Jem and Scout.

In addition Harper Lee uses alliteration. "From somewhere near by come scuffling, kicking sounds, sounds of shoes and flesh scraping." This quote has a good use of 's' sounds. It's alliteration, but also could be classed as sibilance.

This also shows the theme 'good & evil' again. 's' sounds represent the snake from the story of Eden, this Harper Lee creates effect on the reader as it could link to Bob Ewell being the devil.

In this extract an adjective is used "into a flabby male stomach". This is used to describe the character in the novel. This creates effect on the reader as he/she can be part of the story and know what the character looks like. This is good because then the reader can find out about the character in more detail.

(ii)

In this extract the language that Harper Lee uses in the extract influences me on Scout's terrifying experience.

'Jem, Jem, help me, Jem!'

In this quote the explanation mark gives it more power and it shows that Scout is scared. This makes me empathise for ~~Jem~~ Scout as he's in danger.

"Floundering to escape my wire prison". This shows the Scout was in a hurry to get away and find ~~his~~^{her} older brother. This also shows Scout was terrified.

In the novel there is another important event 'the court scene'. Harper Lee uses '...' in the extract to give a pause and build up tension.

~~The discusses~~ This scene is linked to Social inequality as it isn't right to be racist, it is also linked to moral education as Atticus has ~~now~~ taught Scout & Jem the wrongs and rights of life. He is a good teacher and has morals that Scout & Jem have grown up throughout the book and learnt from their father.

~~This shows the~~ The book has shown effects on the reader as it comes to the end of the novel. They have seemed to realise about moral education. This shows that the characters have grown up and think differently about different views.
