The writer shows curleys wife as very mean, strong and overpowering all the other guys are scared & threatened by her because if they are rude, she can get them killed. we know this because in the extract she says "well, you keep your place the nigger, I could get you strung up on a tree so easy it aint even funny", this shows that no matter how much grief people give her, she can always over power them by saying I can get you fired or better yet killed. and she always makes them feel useless saying "Nobody'd listen to you, an' you know it".

The language of the men is. Strange, normally you would think a man's voice is strong but ~~ex~~ because of how Curley's wife treats them, they are scared that they might get killed and she makes the men feel 2 ft tall by saying "Nobody'd listen to you, an' you know it" by saying this she is making the men feel worthless, and we know they feel like this because Candy agrees and says "Nobody'd listen to us". then ~~the~~ ~~are~~ after you know they get scared because Lennie wants George, we know this as Lennie says "I wish George was here" because Lennie knows that George can stand up to Curley's wife and that George can tell her to back off.

Another part in this novel that has violence in it is when George has to shoot Lennie at the end of the book. George has to shoot Lennie because if Lennie stays with George then he is going to keep getting George in trouble and he will keep killing things. Slim killed the dog in the story as well but he killed something out of hate, George killed Lennie because it was the right thing to do. He killed Lennie by getting Lennie to look over the lake and imagine their dream of having their own farm and having a life of freedom as George could only tell his dream to Lennie so it's Lennie's dream as well but as soon as George shoots Lennie in the back of the head, George's dream has gone with Lennie because now George has no one
