Source A: Being a youth today

'I carried out research in my school by giving out 30 questionnaires to male and female students of different ages who I met during one break time. I wanted to find out what it means to be a youth today. I investigated how my sample thought, behaved and dressed. I also asked about what and who influenced them in their lives. Some of my questions were open to allow the respondents to develop their answers further.'

This is a summary of the key findings.

- all youths felt pressure to be accepted by their peer group
- the mass media had more influence on females than males
- very few youths had criminal records
- the majority of youths worried about school grades and relationships
- males were more likely to be in a gang than females
- being in a subculture gave some youths a strong sense of identity and influenced how they behaved, the music they listened to and the way they dressed.

Source B: Representation of youth

The information below is taken from a national newspaper's report on youth and deviance.

'Young people today have taken over our streets. We find them outside the shops, graffitiing buildings and intimidating passers by. Typically they hang around in groups, the 'gangs' or 'crews' that they refer to themselves as. Gaining respect from their peers means everything to them, whatever the cost to society. They have their own uniform, language and moral code. Many are 'tooled up' carrying knives and even guns ready to defend themselves, their friends and their territory. Family means little to them, school and the law even less.'
