Section A – Research methods and evidence

Answer all questions.

Source A: Prison Life

'As a sociologist specialising in crime and deviance, I wanted to know what life was really like for prisoners. Later, after some specialist training, I successfully applied for a job as a prison officer. I spent two years working closely with some of the prisoners, observing and making detailed notes on their routines, behaviour and access to education and training courses. Nobody knew I was conducting the research. I worked in the education department of one women's prison in California.'

This is a summary of my key findings:

- Younger prisoners were more likely than older ones to access the prison education and training courses;
- Most prison officers were male;
- Prisoners, on average, spent 14 hours a day in their cells;
- Drug addiction, shoplifting and prostitution were the main reasons for the women I met being in prison;
- Forming friendships was extremely important to most prisoners.

(Sociological research, California USA, 2010)

Source B: Prisoner 1234

The information below is taken from a national newspaper's article on life behind bars.

'Boring, boring, boring: how many times can I count the bars on my window or the dents in the wall? I hate every minute of every day in this place and can't wait to get out. It's the noise at night time that really gets to me, the crying, shouting, swearing, threatening ... I just wanna sleep. But the officers do nothing, they couldn't care less. How can anyone think prison really solves anything? It just makes you worse – I learnt how to pick a lock the first day I was in here and drugs, well they're everywhere ... cheaper than on the outside too.'

(Adapted from a prisoner's diary, Manchester, 2012)
