Joao Gilberto is 14 years old and has never gone to school. He lives in the Rocinha favela in Rio de Janeiro, Brazil. His house is built partly of brick and partly of wood. It has two rooms: one is a kitchen, and the other is a bedroom/living room. In that room there is one big double bed, and two double bunk beds, along with a wardrobe, a cupboard, a radio, an electric fan and a television set.

Eight people sleep in the room: Joao's father, who is unemployed, his mother who earns $35 a month as a washerwoman for a rich family; Joao's older brother and two younger sisters; his uncle and cousin. Three people sleep in the big bed, and the other five sleep in the bunk beds.

Joao's house is surrounded by rubbish – old tin cans, bottles, rags and other litter. There is a lot of rubbish in the favelas, and because there is no bin collection, there are big dumps all over the place. Joao does not think he will ever be able to afford to live somewhere else.

Maria goes to school every day before helping her grandmother wash clothes in the afternoon.

Maria's grandmother moved to Rio de Janeiro from a place called Pernambuco in north-east Brazil. She brought her family to Rio to try and find a better way of life. Even though they live in a favela, it is still better than life in Pernambuco.

Maria's family are very interested in their community. Together with some neighbours, they organised a clean-up of the streets near their house, and now they are trying to get a medical centre built.
