THE ENVIRONMENT

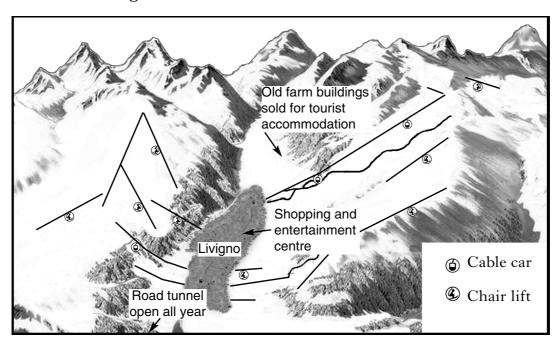

1. Look at the sources below. They show changes which have taken place in an Italian village.

Source A

Livigno is one of the highest villages in the Alps. It used to be cut off during the winter. Nearly all the people in the village were poor farmers, keeping cattle and sheep. Winter was the quiet season, with no money coming in.

Livigno is now a popular skiing resort, with 40,000 visitors at times. Almost everyone in the village makes money from tourism.

2. Look at the source below.

It gives information about plans to restart deep mining for coal in Scotland.

The coal produced in Scotland's deep mines produces too much pollution. However, new technology means that this coal can now be used safely in power stations. This means that power stations can now use the huge reserves of coal which still remain in Scotland. This deep-mined coal also causes less visual pollution than open-cast mining. Carbon emissions would be cut by 40%. The new technology would be cheaper than building new nuclear power stations and would reduce coal imports.

3. Look at the sources below. They give information about crimes against wildlife.

Source A

A golden eagle has been poisoned in the Scottish Borders. It was one of the only breeding pair in the area. This means that no eagles will be raised in the Borders this year. The Royal Society for the Protection of Birds wants stronger sentences and wants police forces to appoint Wildlife Officers to catch offenders. There are government plans to increase penalties for people convicted of wildlife crime. Gamekeepers could lose their gun licences and landowners would be heavily fined.

However, farmers claim that eagles attack young lambs and kill grouse. One landowner said, "We need to earn money from grouse shooting. If these plans are passed, a gamekeeper could not do his job properly."

We want to improve these buildings and put them to a use which will benefit the community. Local people will be employed here and they won't have to travel by car to work elsewhere. We can heat the homes in the village using waste heat from the distillery.

We could have provided more affordable homes instead.

5. Look at the source below. It gives information about home banking. Home banking allows customers to access their bank accounts at home on a computer.

I don't have time to visit the bank. I can switch money between different accounts online and earn more interest.

Customer

I don't use a computer because I'm worried about Internet crime. I don't want my savings stolen.

We think that home banking will lead to job losses. However, there may be new jobs in IT for our members.

Customer

This is a 24 hour service and it means we don't need as many branches. That will save us money and allow us to reduce our charges.

They give information about unemployment and training.

Source B

Trainees on a government course were surveyed. The survey found that:

- 73% of trainees found a job. However, half of them said that the training was not needed for their job.
- Trainees went on the course because they thought it would help them get a job. However, few of them felt that learning job-search skills actually helped them find work.
- The main reason for trainees leaving the course early was because they had found work.
- Many of the long-term unemployed lack confidence and are reluctant to join these training schemes. However, good training can help improve self-confidence.

The Sunday Herald newspaper said that the 2007 opinion poll was "bad news for the SNP". The SNP said it was "very encouraging". Their spokesperson pointed out that many Labour, Liberal Democrat and even Conservative supporters said they were "in favour of independence". The figures for the 18–24 year olds showed more than half in favour of independence, but the over-65 age group showed only 41% in favour. Independence was less popular with women than men. In 1998, just before the Scottish Parliament was set up, opinion polls showed 60% of people preferring devolution and only 34% in favour of independence.
