Scotland's local councils were elected on 3 May 2007 using the Single Transferable Vote (STV) system. This new system, which replaced the traditional “First Past the Post” system, requires voters to rank candidates in order of preference and is intended to produce outcomes in terms of seats that are more proportional to votes than “First Past the Post”.

The use of a broadly proportional system for local elections, it was claimed, would make Scotland’s councils more representative of local views and of the diversity of local society—it would give electors a wider and better choice of candidates and would lead to more voters having a councillor of their choice.
